

Diagram illustrating the greenhouse effect. Sunlight enters the box and is reflected back down, warming the thermometer and plant inside.

EXPERIMENTAL PROCEDURE FOR STUDENTS

1. Preparation of the Greenhouse: A large, clear plastic bag or a transparent container (like a terrarium) is used to create a controlled environment. Inside, a thermometer is placed to monitor temperature, and a small potted plant is included to observe growth over time.

2. Control Setup: A second, identical setup is prepared outside the bag/container, serving as a control to compare temperature and plant growth under natural conditions.

3. Observation and Data Collection: Students record the temperature inside and outside the 'greenhouse' at regular intervals (e.g., every hour) over a period of several days. They also note any changes in the plant's appearance, such as wilting or growth.

4. Analysis: The data is plotted on a graph with temperature on the y-axis and time on the x-axis. The 'greenhouse' temperature is expected to rise significantly higher than the control temperature, demonstrating the trapping of heat.

5. Conclusion: The experiment shows that the greenhouse effect, caused by the trapping of heat by the plastic barrier, leads to a warmer environment inside, which can affect the growth of plants.

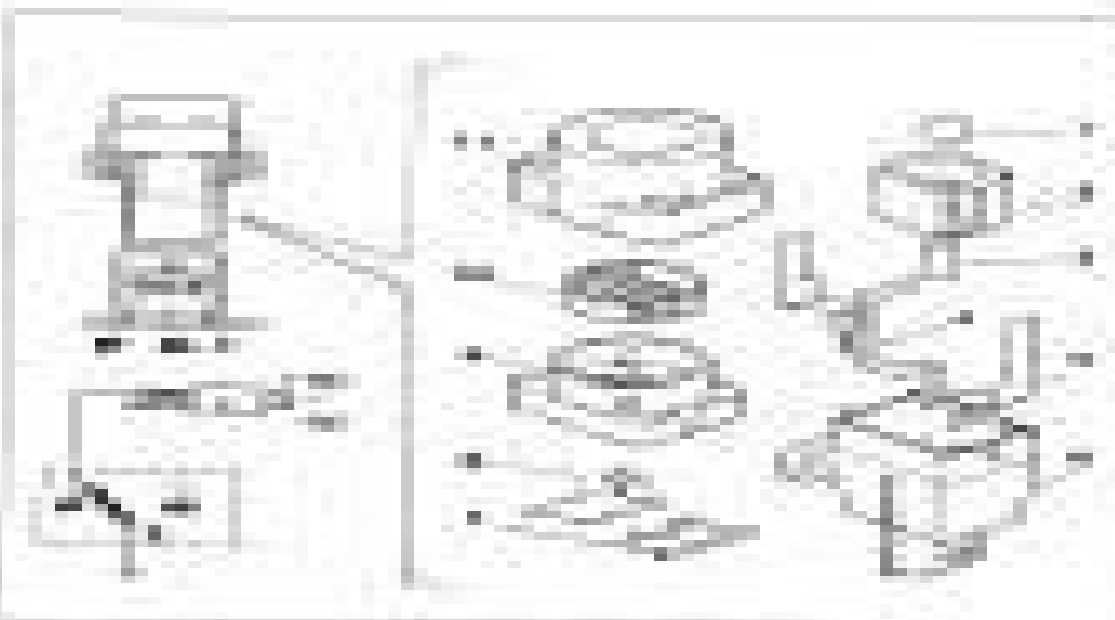

Diagram illustrating a complex experimental setup for studying the greenhouse effect. The setup includes a heat source (Bunsen burner), a series of chambers containing a plant, a thermometer, and another plant, connected by a tube to measure the effect of heat trapping.
