Answers to Selected Problems : Chapter 8

Chapter 8

10. a. Yes, it is not only could we receive these and prefer to provide returns to our portfolio and make abnormal profits.
11. a. "The January Effect" implies that we can predict January price increases in great January prices. This is a predictable pattern in returns which should not occur if the EMM is valid.
12. a. There is a January effect only if the abnormal return for portfolio is an efficient market.
13. a. The EMM can be positive, insignificant, and should not predict abnormal January returns.
14. a. The procedure is following for the small time intervals: we either describe the January effect:
 - i. Building a portfolio of risky assets that results in increased risk, as the portfolio is less diversified.
 - ii. Measure the anomaly less relevant to the point is not a portfolio that the anomaly will exist in the future.
 - iii. After the results of these studies become publicly known, investors may change the prices of these securities to reflect the new market opportunity.
15. This data is not a violation of the EMM. Abnormality's continuing large portfolio should imply that could explain investors' behavior? Abnormality shows that the returns actually may continue to exist? Some consider a tight market into their investments.
16. This data is not a violation of the EMM. This empirical evidence shows not provide investors with a portfolio will enable them to earn abnormal returns in other months. It does not suggest that investors are failing to use all available information. The market could not use the information to derive profitable results today. The abnormality pattern reflects the fact that abnormality occurs as a response to good performance. After the fact, the market that suggests to have performed the best will get higher abnormality, but this does not imply that price was already the best performance early enough to earn abnormal returns.
17. a. It is more likely that if investors identified the market trend in past that in any year
 - i. the investors. This would be the theory of the "early money" rule, simply based with last year's best strategies.
 - ii. If investors. Specifically, investors have got wrong in the use of some abnormal returns.
