"KNOWLEDGE BASED PRACTICE": SOME MODELS OF RESEARCH AND PRACTICE COLLABORATIONS

Dr Maureen Fuary

At one extreme position, it is argued that the essence of evidence-based knowledge is that interventions must be founded upon scientific evidence based on cause and effect explanations...At the other extreme, it is argued that evidence-based knowledge is knowledge that is based upon 'convincing arguments' (Kjerstad 2008: 146)

1. INTRODUCTION

Background and Rationale:

This Discussion Paper has been produced as part of a larger project designed to assist not-for-profit agencies in the area of child safety and therapeutic care to

- frame their needs as research questions and
- design research to meet their practice approaches

This overview discusses the types of partnerships brokered and currently being developed between research based organisations such as Universities, not-for-profit organisations and the community. Of particular interest are those partnerships which are collaborative, participatory and reflexive. While not all the researched materials discussed here meet all these criteria, they have been included to demonstrate and reflect on the diversity and underpinning similarities of many of these models, methods and projects. Only models of collaborative research involving issues of knowledge, in and around the issues of Child Safety and closely related areas are addressed in this Report. From these models we discuss how agencies have been able or not able to build on their research capacities, articulate research questions they need to address, and be involved in the design of research to meet their practice needs and directions.

Method:

This Discussion Paper is the result of desktop research by Maureen Fuary into scholarly articles, grey literature such as non-published reports, conference papers, published position papers, the websites of Peak Bodies and other related institutions, and the electronic tracking of nominated individual scholars-practitioners. It has involved regular inputs from the team - Robyn Lynn, Ros Thorpe, Jo Mensinga, Laurel Downey and Wendy Earles- about directions and project needs. Regular and detailed discussions between Robyn Lynn and Maureen Fuary have kept it on track and shaped its focus.

Selections of research materials were made from a broad sweep of electronic data bases (X-Search, Science Direct, Infotrac, Google Scholar & Google) and the James Cook University library electronic catalogue (Tropicat) in the first instance. The initial search terms used were 'university- community collaborations' and 'academic-industry partnerships', and PAR (participatory action research) with an eye to flushing out a diversity of approaches from a number or related disciplines. After reading some of these papers, the search was increasingly refined to:

- 'evidence-based practice'
- 'research-informed practice'
