DNA was identified as the genetic material relatively recently, unlike proteins. The initial studies were conducted by two teams that added up to this discovery: 1) Oswald Avery's research, in which he experimentally used 1) Streptococcus pneumoniae bacteria, 2) bacteria that caused disease (diphtheria), and 3) DNA. Avery's research showed that DNA is the genetic material.

Griffith finds a "transforming principle."

In 1928, a British microbiologist named Frederick Griffith discovered that bacteria of the Streptococcus pneumoniae species could "transform" from non-virulent to virulent. He found that non-virulent bacteria were killed when taken up by the immune system, but the virulent bacteria were not.

Griffith used bacteria that came in two shapes: one that was virulent (smooth) and one that was non-virulent (rough). He found that the non-virulent bacteria could "transform" into the virulent form when taken up by the immune system. He called this "transforming principle."

Griffith's research showed that the transforming principle was a substance that could be extracted from the bacteria and injected into non-virulent bacteria. He found that the transforming principle was a substance that could be extracted from the bacteria and injected into non-virulent bacteria. He found that the transforming principle was a substance that could be extracted from the bacteria and injected into non-virulent bacteria.
