In Ralph Rigman's book The Whisper of Names, he writes about his experiences growing up in the rural south of the country and how he envisions it possible to recreate the past wealth. His key points in this narrative and political story were that policy changes have resulted in the decline of southern wealth, and that continued machination would result in the downfall of the human race. He argues that by implementing more protectionist policies, agricultural and industrial jobs would return to the country and enable the rebuilding of poverty-stricken communities. Despite his arguments that policy changes have contributed most to the decline of the south, I believe that his lack of recognition of contribution of social factors makes this book highly unbelievable.

In The Whisper of Names, Rigman suggests that policy changes favoring imported goods have devastated the economy of the south. However, he fails to mention that much of the wealth of the south had been held in land-owning prosperous families who had benefited from the slave trade and subsequent cotton and tobacco industries. Throughout the early 20th century, these families continued to prosper under sharecropping laws. The civil rights movement finally brought to light the injustices of racial inequality as well as the violation of human rights that resulted in cheap labor that drove the southern economy. Of course, Mr. Rigman does not mention any of these factors in his book.

By focusing only on legal changes that support his argument, Mr. Rigman ends up weakening his overall statement. To be sure, the increase in imported goods increases competition and forces businesses to lower prices and/or increase innovation to gain customers. However, this is not necessarily a bad thing, and machination has increased worker safety and product consistency. The Whisper of Names is a powerful narrative of one man's observations of the dwindling wealth of the south, but it may not be a result of the movements that he cites.

Chemistry of Multiphase Atmospheric Systems Wolfgang Jaeschke, 2013-06-29 Rapidly increasing interest in the problems of air pollution and source receptor relationships has led to a significant expansion of knowledge in the field of atmospheric chemistry In general the chemistry of atmospheric trace constituents is governed by the oxygen content of the atmosphere Upon entering the atmosphere in a more or less reduced state trace substances are oxidized via various pathways and the generated products are often precursors of acidic compounds Beside oxidation processes occurring in the gas phase gaseous compounds are often converted into solid aerosol particles The various steps within gas to particle conversion are constantly interacting with condensation processes which are caused by the tropospheric water content Thus in addition to the gaseous state a liquid and solid state exists within the troposphere The solid phase consists of atmospheric conversion products or fly ash and mineral dust The liquid phase consists of water conversion products and soluble compounds The chemistry occurring within this system is often referred to as hydrogeneous chemistry The chemist interprets this term however more strictly as reactions which occur only at an interphase between phases This however is not always what happens in the atmosphere There are indeed heterogeneous processes such as reactions occurring on the surface of dry aerosol particles But apart from these we must focus as well on reactions in the homogeneous phase which are single steps of consecutive reactions running through various phases
