

PBS Frontline: Whose Vote Counts?

Reflections on Narratives about Democracy, History, and Voting Rights

Introduction: In the documentary, we hear very distinct narratives about voting rights. People form narratives based on personal experiences, political and other beliefs, and their own interpretations of information. As we know, two people can look at the same data or facts and draw completely different conclusions (which may or may not be logically sound). In this activity, we reflect on and critically examine the distinct narratives presented in the documentary that both shape and are shaped by opinions about voting rights.

Consider the following data and each person's interpretation of it. The Voting Rights Act of 1965 was responsible for huge increases in African American voter registration and turnout, as well as the election of thousands of African Americans to office. What factors might explain the two opposing views on the same data?

U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, The Voting Rights Act: Ten Years After, January 1975, p. 45.

"The Voting Rights Act worked, so we don't need it anymore."

"The Voting Rights Act works, so its protections should remain in place."
