

What is a species?

- A species is a group of organisms that can interbreed and produce fertile offspring
- Members of the same species have a common gene pool
- A species is made up of organisms that:
 - Have similar physiological and morphological characteristics that can be observed and measured
 - Have the ability to interbreed to produce fertile offspring
 - Are genetically distinct from other species
 - Have a common phylogeny (=family tree)
- Bacteria and archaeans can't be classified into species, because the term can only be applied to sexually reproducing organisms

Hybrids

- Hybrid is the infertile offspring that results after 2 different but similar species have mated
- Because the offspring aren't fertile, no new species has been created
 - Instead they're called interspecific hybrids
 - Ex: horse + donkey = mule, horse + zebra = zorse, lion + tiger = liger
- Hybrids are rarely formed in nature, due to species being separated in various ways

Populations

- A population is all the organisms within an area that belong to the same species
- If a group from a species is separated from the rest of the species, it might find itself evolving in a different way
 - Ex: they may end up with different frequencies of certain alleles for a trait
- A population can be geographically or reproductively isolated
 - Ex: bodies of water, mountain ranges, deep canyons, different mating calls or different mating seasons
- Speciation is when a new species is formed from an old one

Autotrophs

- Autotrophs are organisms capable of synthesizing their organic molecules from simple inorganic substances
 - This process involves photosynthesis
 - Light energy + inorganic molecules $\Rightarrow$ organic molecules $\Rightarrow$ chemical energy
