Section 1: Scientific Methods

Read the passage below and answer the questions that follow.

Experiments should be designed to pinpoint cause-and-effect relationships. For this reason, good experiments have two essential characteristics: a single variable is tested, and a control is used. The variable (VER ee uh buhl) is the factor of interest, which, in the example in which Keene High School students hypothesized that phosphate in the river was killing dwarf wedge mussels, would be the level of phosphate in the water. To test for one variable, scientists usually study two groups or situations at a time. The variable being studied is the only difference between the groups. The group that receives the experimental treatment is called the experimental group. In our example, the experimental group would be those mussels that receive phosphate in their water. The group that does not receive the experimental treatment is called the control group. In our example, the control group would be those mussels that do not have phosphate added to their water. If the mussels in the control group thrive while most of those in the experimental group die, the experiment's results support the hypothesis that phosphates from fertilizer are killing the mussels.

IDENTIFYING MAIN IDEAS

One reading skill is the ability to identify the main idea of a passage. The main idea is the main focus or key idea. Frequently a main idea is accompanied by supporting information that offers detailed facts about the main idea.

Read each question and write the answer in the space provided.

1. What are two essential characteristics of a good experiment?

2. How do scientists usually test for one variable?

3. How should experiments be designed?
