These individuals appear to not have experienced the same type of experience as the people in the other studies who were asked to consider a possible, but not a sure, loss. In the latter study, the willingness to forgo future income was only after reflection about the worst case. Referring to the loss that has occurred in the present case, the people in the experiment have not had to consider that possibility. In the latter study, the people were asked to consider a loss that was not a sure thing, but in the present case, the loss was a sure thing. The fact that the willingness to forgo future income was lower here than in the other studies may be due to the fact that the people in the present study were not asked to consider the possibility of a loss that was not a sure thing. Maya Civilisation

c. 2000 BC to AD 900

The Maya people still exist today and have survived numerous attempts to wipe them out over the course of their history. This unit refers mainly to the classical Maya period, which stretches from approx. 250-950 AD. During this time society became more organised around urban areas and society became more organised. Advances were made in astronomy, maths and language, as well as architecture and agriculture. Links were made with other peoples across the continent. Scholars disagree over why the classical period came to an end, although it has been hypothesised that it was caused by a widespread drought, which ended the growth of society and impoverished the population.

Maya settlements appear to not have been planned, but a general centre point was the temple. It is thought that the stepped temples were built both as a statement of grandeur and as a route to the heavens above. This is something the Maya have in common with many other civilisations across the ancient world. Rumours of human sacrifice have seeped into popular culture, but appear to be overblown. Each settlement also had wide-open plazas which served as a meeting point, as well as a ball court where games were held. Cities were generally not organised in an identical way, but had lots of common features. There does not appear to have been a central point of authority in the Maya empire, rather society was organised through a number of rulers at local level. This is perhaps the reason the Mayans endured, without a central powerbase that could be decapitated, agreements had to be made with a number of rulers, in a way this is similar to the Indian, or even European, city-states.
