

RESEARCH Journal of the American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry 2000;39:103-111.

OBJECTIVE: To examine the effects of a 12-week, 10-session, manualized, group-based, parent training program on the parenting behavior of parents of children with conduct problems.

DESIGN: Randomized controlled trial.

SETTING: Child and Adolescent Mental Health Service, Institute of Psychiatry, London, UK.

PARTICIPANTS: Parents of 100 children with conduct problems, aged 7-12 years.

MEASUREMENTS AND MAIN RESULTS: Parents were randomized to either the parent training program or a waitlist control. The program was based on the Parent Management Training (PMT) model. The program was evaluated using a battery of measures of parenting behavior, child behavior, and parent-child relationships. Parents in the PMT group showed significant improvements in parenting behavior, child behavior, and parent-child relationships compared to the waitlist control group.

CONCLUSIONS: The PMT program is an effective intervention for parents of children with conduct problems.

KEY WORDS: Parenting behavior, child behavior, parent-child relationships, conduct problems, PMT.

INTRODUCTION

Parenting behavior is a key factor in the development of children's behavior. Parents of children with conduct problems often exhibit ineffective parenting behaviors, such as harsh discipline, inconsistent discipline, and low warmth. These parenting behaviors are associated with children's conduct problems. Therefore, improving parenting behavior is a key target for intervention in children with conduct problems.

One of the most widely used interventions for parents of children with conduct problems is Parent Management Training (PMT). PMT is a manualized, group-based, parent training program that teaches parents effective parenting skills. PMT has been shown to be effective in improving parenting behavior, child behavior, and parent-child relationships in children with conduct problems.

The current study was a randomized controlled trial of the PMT program. The study aimed to evaluate the effects of the PMT program on parenting behavior, child behavior, and parent-child relationships in parents of children with conduct problems.

METHOD

Participants. The study included 100 parents of children with conduct problems, aged 7-12 years. The children were recruited from a child and adolescent mental health service. The parents were recruited through a variety of sources, including referrals from GPs, social workers, and the service itself.

Intervention. The PMT program was a 12-week, 10-session, manualized, group-based, parent training program. The program was based on the PMT model, which is a manualized, group-based, parent training program that teaches parents effective parenting skills. The program was delivered by a trained facilitator.

Measures. The study used a battery of measures to evaluate the effects of the PMT program. The measures included parenting behavior, child behavior, and parent-child relationships. The measures were assessed at baseline, post-treatment, and follow-up.

Results. Parents in the PMT group showed significant improvements in parenting behavior, child behavior, and parent-child relationships compared to the waitlist control group. The improvements were maintained at follow-up.

Conclusions. The PMT program is an effective intervention for parents of children with conduct problems. The program improves parenting behavior, child behavior, and parent-child relationships.

1. The first step in the process of developing a new product is to identify a market need. This involves conducting market research to determine what customers want and need. Once a need is identified, the next step is to develop a concept that addresses this need. This concept should be unique and offer a clear benefit to the customer. 2. The second step is to develop a business plan. This plan should outline the company's goals, the market it will serve, and the resources it will need. It should also include a financial forecast and a marketing strategy. The business plan is a critical document that will guide the company's development and help it secure funding. 3. The third step is to develop a prototype. This is a physical model of the product that can be used to test the concept and gather feedback from potential customers. The prototype should be as close to the final product as possible, but it can be made from inexpensive materials to keep costs low. 4. The fourth step is to conduct a pilot test. This involves selling the product to a small group of customers and monitoring their reactions. This test will help the company determine if there is a market for the product and if the concept is viable. It will also provide valuable feedback that can be used to improve the product. 5. The fifth and final step is to launch the product. This involves marketing the product to a wider audience and making it available for purchase. The company should continue to monitor sales and customer feedback to ensure the product is successful and make any necessary adjustments.	1.
