Developmental Perspectives in Written Language and Literacy Eliane Segers, Paul van den Broek, 2017-12-15 Research on the development on written language and literacy is inherently multidisciplinary In this book leading researchers studying brain cognition and behavior come together in revealing how children develop written language and literacy why they may experience difficulties and which interventions may help those who struggle Each chapter provides an overview of a specific area of expertise focusing on typical and atypical development providing steps for future research and discussing practical implications of the work The book covers areas of bilingualism dyslexia reading comprehension learning to read atypical populations intervention and new media Thus the book presents a comprehensive overview of the current state of affairs in this field of research The various book chapters have been written by researchers who all have collaborated at some point in their careers with Ludo Verhoeven whose research sets the example for the importance of crossing disciplinary borders to research to take the next important steps The combination of the research in this book sets the stage for future research that connects various fields and hopes to inspire anyone interested in the development of written language and literacy

Men Earn, Women Learn Veronica McGivney, 2004 Male participation in education and training has previously been associated with the enhancement of work skills and employment prospects As a sequel to Excluded Men published in 1999 this book explores whether there have been any changes in men s patterns of participation since the first study It explores the kinds of responses providers are making to address the gender gap in participation and identifies effective strategies from current practice to help providers and practitioners who wish to attract more male learners Based on recent education and training statistical data findings of empirical research and correspondence and conversations with providers researchers and individuals involved in schemes that have successfully targeted and worked with men the report reviews recent participation data in the different education and training sectors

McGivney presents recent findings on the reasons for men's absence from some forms of organised learning as well as from specific areas of community life and reviews some of the methods and strategies that are being employed to draw men into areas that have been becoming increasingly feminised. The findings suggest that there are still clear differences between men and women's motivations to learn and their participation patterns. However, some progress is being made by innovative groups and providers that have increased their focus on men and their practice examples of which are drawn upon by the author. The author sheds an interesting light on what can be done to attract more men into organised forms of learning.

Business Services in European Economic Growth L. Rubalcaba, H. Kox, 2007-08-10. The business services sector contributes heavily to European economic growth. Yet links between business services and their role in economic growth remain under explored. This volume provides a comprehensive approach from an applied economics perspective covering with clear focus all the major mechanisms through which this contribution operates.
