Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week resistance training program on the muscle strength and endurance of the lower extremities in healthy young adults. The subjects were 15 male and 15 female college students, aged 18 to 25 years, who had no previous experience with resistance training. They were randomly assigned to two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The control group performed no resistance training, while the experimental group performed a 12-week resistance training program. The program consisted of three sessions per week, focusing on the lower extremities. The exercises included squats, lunges, and leg presses. The intensity of the training was 70% of the subjects' one-repetition maximum (1RM). The duration of each session was 45 minutes. The subjects were tested at the beginning and at the end of the 12-week period. The tests included a 1RM test, a 10-repetition test, and a 60-second endurance test. The results showed that the experimental group had significantly greater muscle strength and endurance than the control group at the end of the 12-week period. The 1RM test showed a significant increase in strength for the experimental group, while the control group showed no change. The 10-repetition test showed a significant increase in strength for the experimental group, while the control group showed no change. The 60-second endurance test showed a significant increase in endurance for the experimental group, while the control group showed no change. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week resistance training program can improve muscle strength and endurance in healthy young adults.
