

Maritime Security Best Practices

What a vessel security officer or VSO does daily to prevent accidents.

Regular Vessel Inspections

To monitor and ensure security measures, every security officer needs to be vigilant on their vessel and always be looking for anything out of the ordinary.

Oversee maintenance to improve security

If there's anything aboard the ship that doesn't comply with best security measures, it's the job of officers to take care of it the right way.

Manage the coordination and handling of cargo

When loading and unloading cargo, a security officer needs to make sure to do everything according to protocol and ensure proper checks take place.

Proposing modifications

If there are any modifications to the security plan for the vessel, it's the job of the VSO to suggest these to the company security officer, so they can make a company-wide change to improve security.

Report problems

If a vessel audit discovers anything wrong, it's the security officer's job to report it to the company safety officer so they can promptly implement corrective actions.

Assuring security awareness and vigilance

It's not only the job of the VSO to monitor and be vigilant about anything out of the ordinary, but the role of other crew members as well. The safety officer should inspire the crew to be on alert and report potential threats.

Implement security training

It's the job of safety officers to train their crew members about how to behave during normal operations and emergency operations of security.

Report and record security incidents

Anytime there's something out of the ordinary, it's the security officer's job to note and report their findings to the senior security officer and the company security officer.

Ensure screening programs

The VSO needs to run screening programs like transportation worker identification-credential checks that clear crew members to work around the vessel by passing background tests.

Monitor security equipment

A security officer must ensure security equipment is properly operated, tested, calibrated and maintained.

Supervise and support crew members

A vessel's security officer needs to make sure the crew members are acting according to the security plan and regulations for their ship.
