Abstract: This paper presents a policy analysis of the effects of a new policy on the health care system. The study was carried out in a hospital setting. The results show that the new policy has led to a significant increase in the number of patients treated, and a decrease in the waiting time for treatment. The study also found that the new policy has led to a significant increase in the number of patients who are discharged from the hospital, and a decrease in the number of patients who are readmitted. The study concludes that the new policy is effective in improving the health care system, and that it should be implemented in other hospitals.

Example: Referring to the 1996 Census of the United States - A representative sample is taken from households and within the households, all "household" members 18 years of age and older are interviewed. All households are selected using a probability sampling method. The data are then analyzed to determine the characteristics of the population of interest.
