

These studies are of course limited because they are cross-sectional. However, the fact that the same results were found in a number of other studies suggests that the findings are not spurious.

There is also a need to consider the possibility that the results are due to some other factor. For example, it is possible that the results are due to the fact that the study was conducted in a specific country.

Overall, the evidence suggests that the relationship between the variables is not spurious. However, the results are based on a cross-sectional design, and there is a need to consider the possibility that the results are due to some other factor.
