What is Microsoft Access? Microsoft Access is a database management system (DBMS) that allows you to create and manage databases. It is part of the Microsoft Office suite and is used to store and organize data. What are the components of a database? A database consists of several components, including tables, queries, forms, and reports. Tables are used to store data, queries are used to retrieve data, forms are used to enter data, and reports are used to display data. How do you create a database? To create a database, you need to define the tables and the relationships between them. You can use the Access interface to create a database, or you can use the Access API to create a database programmatically. How do you use a database?
