

Demography – Human Population Ecology

Demography

is commonly known as a scientific process to study human demography. Demography is referred as "the study of the characteristics of human populations, such as their growth, survival, distribution and other attributes". Demographers concentrate studies of how to solve health-related issues related to a country's health system and human factors. It is a scientific process to study a population's characteristics of the human being and individual and various phenomena for a certain time span. The demography was a discipline created for different periods of time, and it is one of the disciplines in demography since that moment.

Over the last three centuries, advances in health care and demographic research produced significant changes that improve health and the demography of our population. These changes brought great improvements during a period about 1900. People who lived before 1900 experienced high infant mortality, malnutrition, diseases, and other problems, as well as shorter lives. It used to be common for all countries and populations and individuals were alike, which led to the demography of a few years ago. Today, the world is not the same as it was, and the changes in the structure, which are the most important changes in demography of the human population have changed the professional practice.

Processual archaeologists seek to explain variability in the static archaeological record we observe in the present as a necessary first step toward learning how to learn about the operation of cultural dynamics in the past The approach is a diverse and productive one that focuses on developing learning strategies Researchers pursuing processual archaeology have already discovered a great deal about the archaeological record and about past dynamics and there is a huge potential for building on the foundation laid thus far The contributors to this volume provide clearly written research articles that are easily accessible to upper level undergraduates and professional archaeologists Although the papers do not focus on a single region time period or domain of observation e g settlement patterns or lithics or site structure they are integrated by shared goals for archaeology This book clearly demonstrates that processual archaeology far from having been replaced by post processual archaeology is becoming more and more powerful as our analytic sophistication and knowledge of the archaeological record grow Sociology Thomas J. Ulijaszek, Cristian Capelli, 2015-03-05 The Human Sciences address problems in nature and society that often require coordinated approaches of several scientific disciplines and scholarly research embracing the social and biological sciences and history. When we wish for example to understand how some sub populations and not others come to be vulnerable why a disease spreads in one part of a population and not another or which gene variants are transmitted across generations then a remarkable range of disciplinary perspectives need to be brought together from the study of institutional structures cultural boundaries and social networks down to the micro biology of cellular pathways and gene expression. The need to explain and address differential impacts of pressing contemporary issues like AIDS ageing social and economic inequalities and environmental change are well known cases in point. Population concepts models and evidence lie at the core of approaches to all of these problems if only because accurate differentiation and identification of groups their structures constituents and relations between sub populations are necessary to specify their nature and extent. The study of population thus draws both on statistical methodologies of demography and population genetics and sustained observation of the ways in which populations and sub populations are formed maintained or broken up in nature in the laboratory and in society. In an era in which research needs to operate on multiple levels population thinking thus provides a common ground for communication and critical thought across disciplines. Population in the Human Sciences addresses the need for review and assessment of the framework of interdisciplinary population studies. Limitations to prevailing postwar paradigms like the Evolutionary Synthesis and Demographic Transition were becoming evident by the 1970s. Subsequent decades have witnessed an immense expansion of population modelling and related empirical inquiry with new genetic developments that have reshaped evolutionary population and developmental biology. The rise of anthropological and historical demography and social network analysis are playing major roles in rethinking modern and earlier population history. More recently the emergence of sub disciplines like biodemography and evolutionary anthropology and growing links between evolutionary and developmental biology indicate a growing convergence of biological and social approaches to population.      Human Evolutionary Biology
