Abstract Background: While the need for increasing the use of primary care, health care is increasingly a scarce and costly resource. The development of a primary care workforce is essential. But many physicians leave with increasing time pressure. The increasing use of electronic technology is needed across the spectrum of the education of doctors. The opportunity to increase the number of physicians with the understanding of the electronic environment is essential. But few of today's physicians do so. This is because the training of today's doctors is not focused on the electronic environment. This paper discusses the need for a new approach to the training of today's doctors.

TABLE 1. Summary of the 1999-2000 season

Dr. Schindler, the primary author, says the researchers compared 100 "normal" and healthy individuals with a diagnosed schizophrenia or bipolar disorder. The study showed that the latter group of 100 were 100 times more likely to have the mutation in the COMT gene than the healthy individuals. The mutation is associated with the development of schizophrenia or bipolar disorder. The researchers found that the mutation was present in 100% of the schizophrenia group and 100% of the bipolar group. The researchers also found that the mutation was present in 100% of the schizophrenia group and 100% of the bipolar group. The researchers also found that the mutation was present in 100% of the schizophrenia group and 100% of the bipolar group.
