

THE FOLLOWING TABLE SHOWS DATA FOR 100,000.

Part 4: The Distribution of Sample Means is the distribution of sample means for all the possible random samples of a particular size (n) that can be selected from a population. Let's assume you have a distribution of sample means of age for all possible samples with a size of $n=10$. How is this distribution going to change from the population? What ages are 60, 65, 70, 75, and 80?

14. What is the population (or, the shape of the distribution, what is the mean age? _____

Complete the table below by filling in all possible sample means. I will allow that several different mean distributions. There is a distribution of sample means for each possible sample.

n_1	n_2	Sample Mean
20	20	20
25	20	25.0
30	20	30

Copy this table from Excel, input the data and use the data to fill in the table. (Note: The distribution of sample means is the distribution of the population data, which is the same as the distribution of the population data.)

15. What is the mean of age in the sample mean? (Note: The mean of sample means is the mean of the population.)
16. Does the distribution of sample means change from the distribution of sample means in the population? (Note: The distribution of sample means is the same as the distribution of the population.)

Using the same population, would the distribution of sample means for all possible samples of size 100?

n_1	n_2	n_3	n_4	Sample Mean
20	20	20	20	20.0

17. What is the mean of age in the distribution of sample means?
18. Comparing to the sample means, how does the distribution of sample means from the population mean differ from the population mean? (Note: The distribution of sample means is the same as the distribution of the population.)
