Effect of payment method on the likelihood of reporting a missing wage. The theoretical literature suggests that the probability of reporting a missing wage is higher when the wage is paid in cash than when it is paid by check or direct deposit. This is because cash payments are more likely to be lost or stolen, and the probability of reporting a missing wage is higher when the wage is paid in cash than when it is paid by check or direct deposit. Abstract

5 DIFFERENCES BETWEEN THE TWO INGRESS REPORTS: The first report shows the gross amount left over after being charged for taxes, transportation, labor, etc. at the end of each day. It's the original amount of money that was available to the contractor. The second report shows the amount of money that was left over after all the expenses were paid.
