Lesson Summary

Describing Populations

Birth rate is the number of births in a population during a specific time. The number of births in a population is usually measured in terms of people per year. A high birth rate indicates a growing population.

Change rate is the difference between the birth rate and the death rate. If the birth rate is higher than the death rate, the population is growing. If the death rate is higher than the birth rate, the population is shrinking. If the birth rate and the death rate are equal, the population is stable.

Carrying capacity is the maximum number of individuals that an environment can support. It is determined by the availability of resources such as food, water, and space.
