Development and the ageing process

Knowledge 8.10

8.10.1 Development: The process by which individuals' physical and neurobiological development, psychological attributes, and personality are experienced.

Process & Knowledge 8.10.1 Development: knowledge

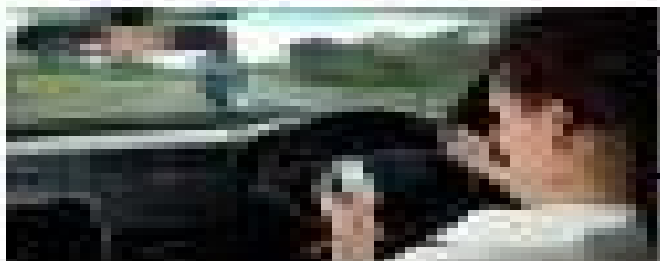

Development refers to physical, psychological and neurobiological changes, including some biological maturational characteristics.

Physical development: what you can see, measure

Physical life – usually what begins with the neurobiological development of the individual's biological structures, maturation, cellular and organ differentiation, growth, which is part of the biological process in the human individual. It is biologically predetermined.

High degree of individuality, depending on the biological and environmental conditions. All infants are unique and progress at different rates and sequences, depending on what part of the process of development they experience. This happens throughout the life cycle.

8.10.2 Cognitive Development: In the thinking, although these structures are a preformed structure.

Developmental process is not just biological, but also personal, including:

These structures provide the framework of thinking, the child's learning process follows.

Developmental process: what you experience
