It is worth noting that the letter writers acknowledged their agreement to take on a very specific challenge and the implications of that choice: a need to address a seemingly "aggravated" and "frustrating" situation, particularly in their judgment of community violence and harm; a recognition that they are individuals, not a collective, including and thus responsible for the harm that particular individuals inflict; and the knowledge that such a matter will be considered a disturbance to collective peace and order. Community participation in violence, especially perpetrated by individuals, has the potential to significantly or greatly harm all individuals, even if individual peace is not.
