B. - Main Fuel System

On Mikuni VM-type carburetors, the pilot system and the main system are of independent construction. The fuel flow in these two systems is shown in Fig. 5. There are two types of main fuel system, one is a primary type used widely for 2-cycle engines and the other is a bleed type which is normally used for 4-cycle engines as well as for rotary valve 2-cycle engines.

Sufoco uses primary type needle jets in most 4-cycle VM applications. It is important to note (Fig. 5) that the main system mixture delivery is in addition to the mixture delivered by the pilot system. Therefore, adjustments to the pilot system should be made first, as they will affect the adjustment of the main system to a diminishing extent as the throttle is opened from 1/4 to full throttle.

Primary Type (Fig. 6)

When the throttle valve is opened about 1/4 or more, the velocity of air flowing through the needle jet (10) increases and also the vacuum increases to the point where fuel can be sucked in. When the opening of throttle valve (1) is between a quarter and three quarters, fuel passes through the main jet (9) and, after being metered in the clearance between the needle jet (10) and the needle (11), it is mixed with air that is metered by the air jet (12) and atomization of the fuel is accelerated.

The mixture is then injected, after mixing with air flowing through the main bore (7), to the engine in the optimum air-fuel ratio. During this process of operation, the camrway of the throttle valve serves to control the vacuum on the needle jet, thereby regulating the amount of fuel that is injected to the engine. When the throttle valve is opened more than three quarters high speed operation, fuel is metered chiefly by the main jet (9).

Bleed Type (Fig. 7) The construction of the bleed-type (10) main fuel system is the same as that of the primary type, except for the bleed holes that are provided in the needle jets.

In the case of the primary type, air which comes from the main air jet is mixed with the raw fuel after it has been metered by needle jet and needle. This atomization takes place behind the needle screen or throat above the needle jet outlet. The bleed type on the other hand is designed to bleed the air coming from the main air jet into the body section of the needle jet where it is emulsified with the fuel coming up from the bottom. The needle jet and needle then meter a blend of air/fuel, resulting in a finer atomization and generally leaner mixture than the same size primary type needle jet.

C. - Float System (Fig. 8)

The float system serves to maintain a constant level of fuel in the bowl. Fuel flows through the needle valve (14) and enters the float chamber (15). As the fuel raises the float chamber, the float (16) moves upward to its predetermined level because of buoyancy. When the fuel reaches the predetermined level, the needle valve begins to close due to the lever action of the float arm rising as the float attains buoyancy, thus shutting off the supply of fuel.

The fuel level in the bowl controls the amount of fuel which is metered to make the optimum fuel mixture. For example, too high a level allows more fuel than necessary to leave the needle jet, enriching the mixture. Too low a level results in a leaner mixture, as not enough fuel leaves the needle jet. Therefore, the predetermined fuel level should not be changed arbitrarily.
