These findings suggest that the use of a single, standardized, and validated measure of self-esteem may not be sufficient to capture the complexity of self-esteem in the workplace. Future research should explore the use of multiple measures of self-esteem to better understand its role in organizational behavior.

Stronger evidence for this conclusion is provided by comparing these findings with past studies. The results of the present study are consistent with previous research that has found that the use of a single-item measure of self-esteem is associated with a higher risk of bias than the use of a multi-item measure.
