

What is the Immune System?

The immune system is a network of cells, tissues, and organs that work together to defend the body from harmful germs and infections. Think of it as your body's personal security system that constantly patrols and fights off threats.

Main Functions of the Immune System:

1. Defense Against Pathogens:

- The immune system identifies and attacks harmful germs (bacteria, viruses, fungi) that try to invade your body.

2. Recognizing and Removing Harmful Substances:

- It can recognize damaged or dead cells and clear them out, preventing infections or diseases.

3. Memory Function:

- The immune system "remembers" previous infections so it can respond faster the next time that same germ tries to attack. This is the basis for how vaccines work.

Key Components of the Immune System:

1. White Blood Cells (WBCs or Leukocytes):

- White blood cells are the main soldiers of the immune system. There are different types, each with specific roles:
 - Phagocytes: These cells "eat" and destroy harmful germs. A common type is the macrophage, which patrols the body and gets rid of dead or damaged cells.
 - Lymphocytes: These cells target specific germs and help develop immunity. The two main types are:
 - B cells: They produce antibodies, proteins that stick to germs and mark them for destruction.
 - T cells: They help kill infected cells and support other immune functions.

2. Antibodies:
