- A plan for the investigation, including the dependent variable.
- A plan for the investigation, including the control group.

Why is experimental design important?

It allows scientists to test their hypotheses and to draw conclusions about the relationship between variables. It also allows them to control for confounding variables and to ensure that their results are valid.

What are the components of an experimental design?

- Independent Variable: The variable that is manipulated or changed by the researcher.
- Dependent Variable: The variable that is measured or observed.
- Control Group: A group of subjects that does not receive the treatment, used for comparison.
- Experimental Group: A group of subjects that receives the treatment.
- Randomization: The process of randomly assigning subjects to the control or experimental groups.
- Blinding: The process of keeping the researchers and/or subjects unaware of the group assignments.

How do you write an experimental design?

1. Identify the independent variable and the dependent variable.

2. Formulate a hypothesis about the relationship between the variables.

3. Design the experiment, including the control group and the experimental group.

4. Randomize the subjects and assign them to the control or experimental groups.

5. Implement the experiment and collect data.

6. Analyze the data and draw conclusions.

What are some common mistakes in experimental design?

- Confounding Variables: Variables that are not controlled for and that may affect the results.
- Selection Bias: The process of selecting subjects that are not representative of the population.
- Measurement Error: The process of measuring the dependent variable incorrectly.
- Non-Response Bias: The process of subjects dropping out of the study, leading to biased results.

How can you avoid these mistakes?

- Control Confounding Variables: Keep all other variables constant.
- Randomize Subjects: Use randomization to assign subjects to the control or experimental groups.
- Use Valid Measurement Tools: Use tools that are known to be accurate.
- Follow Up on Dropouts: Try to contact subjects who drop out to see if they can be included in the analysis.
