1. The first step in the accounting process is to identify the business transactions that affect the business. This step is often referred to as the "analysis" step. It involves determining which transactions are relevant to the business and which are not. For example, a business might not be interested in transactions that are purely personal or that do not affect the business's financial position. Once the relevant transactions have been identified, the next step is to record them in the accounting system. This is often done using a double-entry system, where each transaction is recorded in two accounts: a debit account and a credit account. The total debits must equal the total credits for each transaction. This ensures that the accounting system is balanced and that the business's financial position is accurately reflected. The final step in the accounting process is to prepare financial statements. These statements provide a summary of the business's financial performance over a period of time. They include the income statement, the balance sheet, and the cash flow statement. These statements are used by management and other stakeholders to make decisions about the business's future. The accounting process is a continuous cycle that repeats itself every year. It is essential for the success of any business, as it provides the information needed to make informed decisions about the business's financial future.

EBOOK: Financial Accounting (GE), 8e Robert Libby, Frank Hodge, Patricia Libby, 2016-04-16 EBOOK Financial Accounting GE 8e Study Guide for Use with Financial Accounting Robert Libby, Patricia A. Libby, Daniel G. Short, 2003 Libby Libby Short wrote this text based on their belief that the subject of financial accounting is inherently interesting but financial accounting textbooks are often not. They believe most financial accounting textbooks fail to demonstrate that accounting is an exciting field of study and one that is important to future careers in business. When writing this text they considered career relevance as their guide when selecting material and the need to engage the student as their guide to style pedagogy and design. Libby Libby Short is the only financial accounting text to successfully implement a real world single focus company approach in every chapter. Students and instructors have responded very favorably to the use of focus companies and the real world financial statements. The companies chosen are engaging and the decision making focus shows the relevance of financial accounting regardless of whether or not the student has chosen to major in accounting.
