WIDE EXPOSURE Just east of the Kew-Forest CEMETERY on the shorelines of Kew Pond is an estimated 10,000-acre stormwater park, which, unfortunately, is the last stop it'll ever see on its journey destined to the lowest low to make the old Saginaw River International Airport a Wetland. (Thanks to its location, the land will be used for wetland restoration—think waterfowl and water lilies.) The park will be open to the public, but the water and a handful of acres there will still need to be drained. The State has been making the park, though, in the areas that have been drained. Wetlands will be created along the shore of the Saginaw River, and the park will be open to the public.
