even more prevalent in future and will complete the chain and flow of information from the sensor via processing to the actuator which may be anyone or anything from a human healthcare professional to a robot. Methods for automating the processing of information such as signal processing, machine learning, predictive analytics and decision support are increasingly important for providing actionable information and supporting personalized and preventive healthcare protocols in both biomedical and digital healthcare systems and applications. This book of proceedings presents 50 papers from the 12th eHealth conference eHealth2018 held in Vienna, Austria, in May 2018. The theme of this year's conference is Biomedical Meets eHealth: From Sensors to Decisions, and the papers included here cover a wide range of topics from the field of eHealth. The book will be of interest to all those working to design and implement healthcare today.

Diabetes Technology Boris Draznin, 2019-06-17. We live in a century of technological revolution and the birth of artificial intelligence. New and improved insulin administration devices, increased capacity for monitoring one's blood glucose levels, and the ability to communicate directly with the device supplying insulin, as well as with the patient and his/her healthcare provider, have changed diabetes therapy forever. The problem is that diabetes-related technology is moving ahead much faster than physicians and other healthcare professionals can incorporate these advances into our practices. Diabetes Technology will consist of three parts. Part I addresses the clinical science of diabetes pumps, continuous glucose monitoring, and communication technology with numerous practical aspects. Part III offers personal stories of healthcare providers who treat their own diabetes with modern diabetes technology. In particular, they will address how and why they decided to use this technology and the positive and negative aspects of their decision.
