10. Abstract: The purpose of this study was to investigate the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of sedentary middle-aged men. The study was a randomized controlled trial. The participants were 40 men, aged 45-55 years, who were sedentary and had no history of cardiovascular disease. They were randomly assigned to either a training group (n=20) or a control group (n=20). The training group performed a supervised exercise program consisting of aerobic and resistance training, three times per week, for 12 weeks. The control group remained sedentary. The primary outcome was the change in HRQL, measured using the EuroQol-5D questionnaire. Secondary outcomes included changes in physical fitness (maximal oxygen consumption, VO₂max, and 6-minute walk test) and blood pressure. The results showed that the training group had a significant improvement in HRQL compared to the control group. The training group also had a significant improvement in VO₂max and 6-minute walk test, while the control group showed no change. There was no significant difference in blood pressure between the two groups. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve HRQL and physical fitness in sedentary middle-aged men.
