As "conformant" behavior, such has been used by researchers to categorize compliance that is given on the subject's internal desire to fit in with the group. This type of compliance is also referred to as "assimilation" when applied to the socialization of children from one cultural background to another (e.g., the "acculturation" of immigrants to the "mainstream" culture). Individuals who conform and willingly give up their individuality

Abstract

1. Introduction

*Values differ. Rounded only. Not comparable with the results in separate studies.

These authors emphasize that the use of a single measure of the dependent variable may obscure important information. They suggest that researchers should consider multiple measures of the dependent variable.
