Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of older adults. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The participants were 60 older adults (mean age = 72.5 years) who were randomly assigned to either a walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group received no intervention. The primary outcome measure was the change in the 6-minute walk test (6MWT) score. The secondary outcome measures were the change in the Short Physical Performance Battery (SPPB) score, the change in the Geriatric Depression Scale (GDS) score, and the change in the SF-36 Health Survey score. The results showed that the walking program significantly improved the 6MWT score, the SPPB score, the GDS score, and the SF-36 Health Survey score compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of older adults.
