Title: Circular Flow Model

Grade Level: 4

Unit of Study: Northeast Economics

GLCE:

E1.0.7: Demonstrate the circular flow model by engaging in a market simulation, which included households and businesses and depicts the interaction among them.

E1.0.2: Describe some characteristics of a market economy.

Abstract: A market simulation can depict the interaction between households and business and demonstrate the circular flow model. For example, students can sell their labor to businesses in return for a wage, which they spend for goods and services. Businesses purchase goods and services from other businesses which employ labors who also spend their wages for goods and services. Household can provide capital for business by investing in stocks or purchasing bonds.

Key Concepts: How does a market economy work?

Key Vocabulary: Goods, Services, Income, Provider, Market Economy, Wages, Labor

Sequence of Activities:

1. The Marketplace
Talk with your students about the market economy that exists in the United States. Buying and selling creates the marketplace. People start businesses to earn a profitable income. They decide whether they would like to provide a good and/or a service to consumers. People who pay for goods and services are called buyers or consumers. Buyers and sellers come together in the marketplace.
2. Introduce the circular flow model. Background information is included at the end of this lesson.
3. The teacher will act as the employing firm. The teacher will give jobs for completion in the school or classroom such as picking up trash, cleaning, dusting, library helper, office assistant, etc.
4. Students will be "paid" for their work in the form of a Hershey Kiss. The chocolate can then be immediately consumed, or saved for a future goods or services. For example, the student may save the chocolate, and later pay the firm for a particular service, such as extra recess, or extra work time on a past due assignment. The chocolate could also be saved to buy certain goods such as pencils, erasers, etc.
5. Expand or modify this lesson as needed.
