

Assisting the Milk Ejection Reflex

This will help with relaxation and will help stimulate the milk ejection reflex.

1. Massage the milk producing cells and ducts. Start at the top of the breast. Press firmly into the chest wall. Move fingers in a circular motion on one spot on the skin

2. Stroke the breast area from the top of the breast to the nipple with a light tickle-like stroke.

3. Shake the breast while leaning forward so that gravity will help the milk eject.

Stark,2012-01-05 This edition of the Manual of Neonatal Care has been completely updated and extensively revised to reflect the changes in fetal perinatal and neonatal care that have occurred since the sixth edition This portable text covers current and practical approaches to evaluation and management of conditions encountered in the fetus and the newborn as practiced in high volume clinical services that include contemporary prenatal and postnatal care of infants with routine as well as complex medical and surgical problems Written by expert authors from the Harvard Program in Neonatology and other major neonatology programs across the United States the manual s outline format gives readers rapid access to large amounts of valuable information quickly The Children s Hospital Boston Neonatology Program at Harvard has grown to include 57 attending neonatologists and 18 fellows who care for more than 28 000 newborns delivered annually The book also includes the popular appendices on topics such as common NICU medication guidelines the effects of maternal drugs on the fetus and the use of maternal medications during lactation Plus there are intubation sedation guidelines and a guide to neonatal resuscitation on the inside covers that provide crucial information in a quick and easy format

Maintenance of Lactation by Means of Breast Massage and Manual Expression Kathryn Wetherbee Betzhold,1982 Lactation Margaret Neville,2013-11-11 This book had its genesis In the frustrations of the editors in locating authoritative up to date material for an interdisciplinary graduate course in mammary gland biology lactation and breast feeding As we turned to the original literature several reasons for the dearth of usable material became clear 1 In the areas of mammary gland biology and physiology particularly as they relate to the human reviews simply have not kept up with current research which has in the last two decades provided tremendous insight into the mechanisms of milk secretion and its control 2 The lack of interest in human milk as infant food inhibited researchers until very recently from investigating human lactation 3 Much of the relevant clinical information remains anecdotal with little scientific basis In this book we have tried to present the fundamentals of mammary gland physiology at the organismic and cellular levels in a form readily understood by physicians scientists and other professionals This basic information is accompanied by authoritative reviews of the nutritional and immunological properties of human milk and by clinically relevant chapters designed to help health care professionals deal with the medical problems of the breast feeding mother and her infant We have strived in these chapters for up to date authoritative but readable accounts In so far as possible we have avoided areas where much of our understanding rests on speculation In the clinical domain this was not always possible because of a lack of solid scientific information about breast feeding
