Abstract: Strategic human resource management (HRM) is a subject that has been discussed since 1970, when it became the predominant business system of strategy. Strategic human resource management (SHRM) is a management strategy that aims to improve the performance of the organization by using human resources. SHRM is a management strategy that aims to improve the performance of the organization by using human resources. This is a multi-equation 2-ly hypothesis that describes the relationship between SHRM and organizational performance. The model is as follows:

Final reflection (p. 106) is the final text with authors' critical and reflective contributions towards the subject of sustainability. Sustainability is a multidisciplinary (and interdisciplinary) matter and integration (also not achieved), multidisciplinary examples, final sustainability principles is suggested as future challenges. Final thoughts: the future needs also sustainable but not just final thoughts through a sustainability perspective. Sustainability is a continuous commitment not just one achievement (final goal). Also not sustainability is a final goal.
