

ANSWERS AND EXPLANATIONS

Each of the two brothers had a certain opinion. They also were both not completely satisfied with their own part of the world as shown by their story. The story was not really about two people, but that perspective was an alternative to the point of view of the author. They both said "I am" which implicitly placed the others in their conversations.

When the characters were not with each other, each kept to his perspective, which was somewhat negative. For example, when the two were together, they were both very positive. The positive speaking for him and for her was really about the relationship between them.

The authors took a more general approach. The authors were not just the two people in the story. The story was really about the story, which was not about the characters. The positive speaking for him and for her was really about the relationship between them. And each kept to his perspective, which was somewhat negative.
