2. List three essential features shared by all cells;
3. Describe the similarities and differences between prokaryotic and eukaryotic cells;
4. Identify the cell parts described in the exercises;
5. State the function for three cell parts;
6. Classify cells according to their shape and animal cells;
7. Recognize the grossly-organized cell structure in the grossly-organized.

Introduction

Structurally and functionally, all life has one common feature: all living organisms are composed of cells. The development of this concept began with Robert Hooke's observations of cork tissue and grew more fully up of small units. He called these units "cells" because their structure reminded him of the small cubicles that monks lived in. From the year 1665 on, the cell theory emerged. This theory has three principles: (1) all organisms are composed of one or more cells; (2) the cell is the basic living unit of organization; and (3) all cells arise from preexisting cells.

Although cells vary in organization, size, and function, all share three essential features: (1) all possess a plasma membrane defining the boundary of the living material; (2) all contain a region of fluid cytoplasmic matrix; and, (3) include genetic material, and (4) all possess cytoplasm, everything within the plasma membrane that is not part of the fluid region.
