Learning a non-native language in a naturalistic environment: Insights from behavioural and neuroimaging research Christos Pliatsikas, Vicky Chondrogianni, 2015-09-02 It is largely accepted in the relevant literature that successful learning of one or more non native languages is affected by a number of factors that are independent of the target language. per se these factors include the age of acquisition AoA of the target language the type and amount of formal instruction the learners have received as well as the amount of language use that the learners demonstrate. Recent experimental evidence suggests that one crucial factor for efficient native like performance in the non native language is the amount of naturalistic exposure or immersion that the learners receive to that language. This can be broadly defined as the degree to which

language learners use their non native language outside the classroom and for their day to day activities and usually presupposes that the learners live in an environment where their non native language is exclusively or mostly used Existing literature has suggested that linguistic immersion can be beneficial for lexical and semantic acquisition in a non native language as well as for non native morphological and syntactic processing More recent evidence has also suggested that naturalistic learning of a non native language can also have an impact on the patterns of brain activity underlying language processing as well as on the structure of brain regions that are involved expressed as changes in the grey matter structure This Research Topic brings together studies on the effects of learning and speaking a non native language in a naturalistic environment These include more efficient or native like processing in behavioural tasks tapping on language lexicon morphology syntax as well as changes in the brain structure and function as revealed by neuroimaging studies

English Language Teaching in South America Lía D. Kamhi-Stein, Gabriel Díaz Maggioli, Luciana C. de Oliveira, 2017-05-23 This book investigates new English language policies and initiatives which have been introduced and implemented across Argentina Brazil Chile Colombia Ecuador Uruguay and Venezuela Chapters are organized around three themes Chapters in the first section critically examine newly implemented English language policies as well as factors that contribute to and prevent the implementation of such policies Chapters in the second section describe and analyze current teacher preparation and teacher development initiatives in addition to the challenges and opportunities associated with such initiatives Finally the third section features school and classroom based research designed to investigate the status of English language teaching and the implementation of innovative programs All authors have a first hand understanding of the South American context and draw on references and resources which originate beyond Inner Circle countries The book showcases examples of innovation and success in a variety of complex contexts and will serve as a starting point for researchers as well as being of interest to students policymakers and stakeholders This book is open access under a CC BY NC ND licence
