Abstract: Phragmites australis (Cav.) Trin. ex Steud. is a dominant species in coastal wetlands and is a major component of the salt marsh ecosystem. It is a highly invasive species and has been found to be a major problem in many coastal wetlands. The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of herbicide application on the growth and survival of Phragmites australis in a salt marsh ecosystem. The study was conducted in a salt marsh in the coastal plain of Georgia. The marsh was divided into two sections, one of which was treated with a herbicide. The herbicide was applied in the spring and the summer. The growth and survival of Phragmites australis were monitored throughout the study. The results of the study showed that the herbicide application had a significant effect on the growth and survival of Phragmites australis in the salt marsh ecosystem. The herbicide application reduced the growth and survival of Phragmites australis in the treated section of the marsh. The herbicide application also reduced the biomass of Phragmites australis in the treated section of the marsh. The herbicide application had a significant effect on the growth and survival of Phragmites australis in the salt marsh ecosystem.
