

EXERCISE #6 – LAB SUMMARY

NAME: _____

LAB DAY _____ TIME: _____

TABLE 6.1 Light absorption characteristics of chlorophyll (plot your data (wavelength vs. absorbance) on the graph paper provided on the instructor's desk).

WAVELENGTH (nm)	COLOR OF LIGHT AT THIS WAVELENGTH	ABSORBANCE
400	Violet	0.8
425	Blue/Violet	1.09
450	Blue	0.98
475	Blue	0.53
500	Blue/Green	0.1
525	Green	0.08
550	Green/Yellow	0.12
575	Yellow	0.18
600	Yellow/Orange	0.24
625	Orange	0.6
650	Red	0.09
675	Violet	0.8

Using your data and completed graph, answer the following questions:

- Identify the colors of light and their corresponding wavelengths that showed the highest amount of absorption by the chlorophyll extract. (Hint: look at the two peaks on your graph)
The exact peak wavelengths may differ slightly but they should be around 430–460 nm (blue/violet) and 640 – 670 (orange/red).
- Identify the color(s) and their corresponding wavelength(s) that are the most capable of stimulating photosynthesis. With regards to absorbance and transmittance, explain why these colors have the greatest influence.
These will be the same colors and wavelengths mentioned in question one. The reason these have the greatest influence is because it is the energy from light that the plant absorbs that stimulates photosynthesis.
- Identify the color and its corresponding wavelength that is the “least” capable of stimulating photosynthesis. Explain why this color has little to no stimulating effect.
The lowest absorbance should be around 550 nm. Because the plant does not absorb much of this color of light (and therefore little energy from this color of light), green light does not stimulate photosynthesis.
- What would you expect to happen to the rate of photosynthesis if you exposed a plant to an environment in which only green light was present? Explain your answer.
Because chlorophyll does not absorb green light, and because chlorophyll is the primary photosynthetic pigment, the plant would not absorb enough energy to stimulate photosynthesis.
