CONCLUSION

the maximum amount of light available to the plant. In addition to different rates of growth the results showed that red and blue light were most effective in terms of photosynthesis. There was more growth in green and white light than in blue light and more growth in blue and white light than in green light. The figure of photosynthesis in red light is comparable with the figure of photosynthesis in white light. It would be interesting to see if this is the case in other photosynthetic organisms.

FUTURE CONSIDERATION

My latest thought about this ground was to add forest again, but the figures about global carbon sinks are close to zero and questions by ecologists are complicated. And it had also become very hard to find any ideas about linking the movement to a natural forest state.
