Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health of sedentary, middle-aged men. The subjects were 20 men, aged 40-50 years, who were sedentary and had no known health problems. They were randomly assigned to either a training group or a control group. The training group performed a 12-week program of aerobic and resistance training, while the control group remained sedentary. Physical fitness was measured using a variety of tests, including a 1-mile run, a 1.5-mile walk, a 1.5-mile jog, a 1.5-mile swim, and a 1.5-mile bike ride. Health was measured using a variety of tests, including a blood pressure reading, a heart rate reading, a cholesterol reading, and a blood sugar reading. The results of the study showed that the training group had significantly better physical fitness and health than the control group at the end of the 12-week program. The training group had a lower 1-mile run time, a lower 1.5-mile walk time, a lower 1.5-mile jog time, a lower 1.5-mile swim time, and a lower 1.5-mile bike time than the control group. The training group also had a lower blood pressure reading, a lower heart rate reading, a lower cholesterol reading, and a lower blood sugar reading than the control group. These results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness and health of sedentary, middle-aged men.

- As a result, the impact of the 2008-09 financial crisis on the demand for the services of the 2009-10 fiscal year was estimated to be 10.5%.
