Greenhouse Effect: Warming of the Atmosphere
 The greenhouse effect is the process by which the Earth's atmosphere warms the surface of the planet. It occurs because certain gases in the atmosphere, known as greenhouse gases, trap heat from the sun. The sun's rays hit the Earth's surface, and some of the heat is reflected back into the atmosphere. The greenhouse gases then absorb this heat and re-radiate it in all directions, including back towards the Earth's surface. This process keeps the Earth warm enough to support life. Without the greenhouse effect, the Earth would be too cold for most plants and animals to survive.

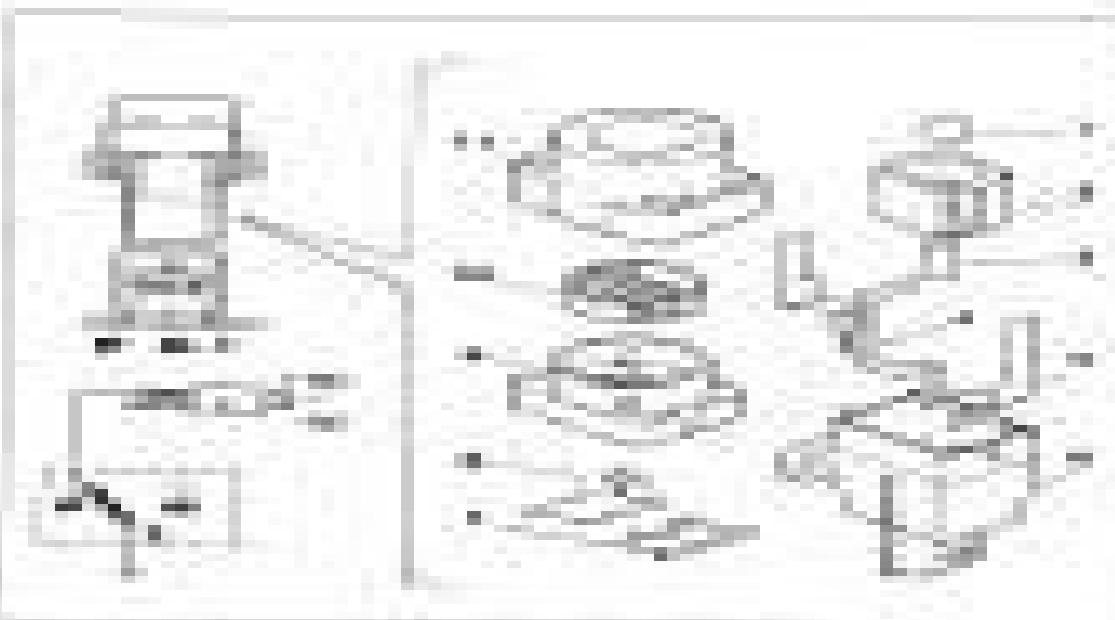

Diagram of a greenhouse. On the left, a cross-section of a greenhouse shows sunlight entering through the glass roof and hitting a plant. On the right, a circular diagram shows a globe with arrows representing sunlight hitting it. Some arrows are reflected away, while others are shown being reflected back towards the globe by a curved line representing the atmosphere.
