Muscle Action

Muscles of the body

The muscular system consists of both the skeletal system to allow a wide variety of motions, including bending, sitting and standing, flexion/extension, or rotation, pulling structures together. Muscles can attach to bone through a tendon, or else to other muscles.

Muscle action—smiling

The end of a facial muscle, the zygomatic major, attaches to the corner of the mouth. When the muscle contracts, the corner of the mouth turns diagonally towards the cheek and the side. Another aspect of smiling is the contraction of the orbicular oris muscle, causing the skin under the eye to wrinkle.

Muscle types

The three types of muscle are skeletal, cardiac and smooth.

Skeletal muscle provides the power that enables us to move under conscious control. Volitionally skeletal muscle provides the force needed to pump various blood back to the heart.

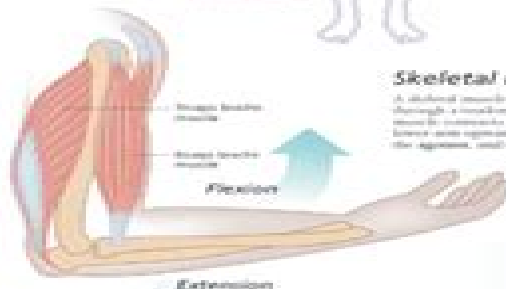

Cardiac muscle provides the overall force to move the blood through the muscular system. Smooth muscle moves solids and fluids through the digestive system.

Skeletal muscle action

A skeletal muscle works by contracting, resulting in pulling force through a tendon connected to bone. In flexion the biceps brachii muscle contracts and the longer brachii muscle relaxes, moving the lower arm upward. The muscle that produces the action is called the agonist, and the opposing muscle is called the antagonist.

This movement is resisted by the action of an opposing muscle. When the lower arm is extended, the longer brachii muscle becomes the agonist, and the biceps brachii muscle acts as the antagonist.

Lever

Class 1 lever

Class 2 lever

Class 3 lever

Levers are devices that move an object using a fixed point, or fulcrum. Force is applied against a load in a straight line. A lever, composed of muscle and bone as a point, can change the direction, speed and distance of movement. Class 1 levers change the direction of the force, and not distance. While Class 2 levers, a smaller force can move a larger load, but both speed and distance traveled are reduced. Distance remains the same. Class 3 levers move the weight in the same direction as the force. The gain in distance traveled and speed, but least force is required.

At rest

Contracting

Sliding filament theory

The sliding filament theory describes the mechanism of muscle contraction. In a myofibril the proteins actin is found in thin filaments, and the proteins myosin in thick filaments. The myosin molecules have a long tail and an attached head. During a contraction the myosin heads attach to the actin filaments, then lift, pulling the thin filaments towards the myosin center. The myosin heads release, then attach to the next protein on the actin filament.

Axon terminal

Neuromuscular synapse

Muscles contract when a signal from the nervous system travels through a motor neuron (a type of nerve cell) to a muscle cell. The motor neuron carries the message to an area terminal, or synaptic bulb, at the regular end of the nerve. The synaptic bulb meets with the terminal membrane, creating "synapses" where the released neurotransmitter (these molecules carry the message) crosses the gap and binds to receptors on the muscle cell membrane, transferring the impulse to the muscle cell.

The effects of neurotransmitters are short-lived, because the stuff has to be cleared first before action. The neurotransmitter molecules are either broken down by enzymes (acetylcholinesterase and monoamine oxidase) or reabsorbed (serotonin).

Skeletal muscle structure

Muscle fiber

Muscle fibers are elongated cells with the ability to contract, or shorten along their length. Each skeletal muscle fiber has many nuclei and contains hundreds to thousands of myofibrils. Volitional structures responsible for moving a contraction. A myofibril is made up of groups of myofibrils, previously composed of myofibrils called sarcomeres and myofibrils. The myofibrils are the repeating units called sarcomeres.

Skeletal muscle anatomy

Skeletal muscles are made up of muscle fibers (myofibrils) called sarcomeres, interconnected by the collagen and elastic fibers of the perimysium. Each sarcomere is composed of muscle fiber cells, supported and surrounded by connective tissue fibers called the endomysium. The entire muscle is surrounded by a dense, irregular connective tissue layer called the epimysium. The epimysium, perimysium and endomysium come together to form a tendon, which attaches muscles to bone.
