

Microbial Protection

How microbially-influenced components of immunity

Why?

The importance of control by the microorganisms of themselves, including organisms that will cause the host harm. The ability to understand both what is involved with the organism's microbially-influenced response to the host and vice versa will, ultimately, enhance our knowledge of the immune response to the organism's influence on the host's response, as well as the way humans' specialized T cell response to infection cause stronger microbially-influenced host anti-infective responses.
