

Eutrophication

Excess nutrients in ecosystems are important stressors

Effects

Excess (total) nutrient additions to aquatic ecosystems can lead to increased phytoplankton biomass and algal blooms. These organisms are consumed by herbivores, causing the proliferation of higher trophic levels and thereby increasing the risk of food web collapse. However, increased phytoplankton biomass can also lead to hypoxia and anoxia, which can suppress or eliminate the food chain portion above.

Nutrient enrichment eutrophication is a major theme in freshwater ecology. Some themes come and go but the inevitable release of phosphorus and nitrogen that accompanies human presence seems to ensure that eutrophication will not soon become an outmoded subject of study. Eutrophication raises issues that range from the pressingly practical problems of phosphorus removal to the very fundamental ecological questions surrounding biological community regulation by resource supply. Although it is possible to take a reductionist approach to some aspects of eutrophication, the study of eutrophication is fundamentally a branch of ecosystem ecology. To understand eutrophication in a given setting, one is inevitably forced to consider physical, chemical, and biological phenomena together. Thus, while eutrophication is the focus of our study of Lake Dillon, we have assumed that a broad base of limnological information is a prerequisite foundation. Eutrophication of a lake can be studied strictly from a limnological perspective. If so, the nutrient income of the lake is quantified but the sources are combined within a black box whose only important feature is total loading. It is also possible, however, to treat the watershed and lake as equally important components of a hybrid system. In this case, the nutrient sources must be dissected and their variability and dependence on key factors such as runoff must be quantified.      Eutrophication: Causes, Consequences and Control Abid A. Ansari, Sarvajeet Singh Gill, 2013-11-19

Eutrophication continues to be a major global challenge, and the problem of eutrophication and availability of freshwater for human consumption is an essential ecological issue. The global demand for water resources, due to increasing population, economic developments, and emerging energy development schemes, has created new environmental challenges for global sustainability. Accordingly, the area of research on eutrophication has expanded considerably in recent years. Eutrophication, acidification, and contamination by toxic substances are likely to pose increasing threats to freshwater resources and ecosystems. The consequences of anthropogenic-induced eutrophication of freshwaters are severe deterioration of surface waters and growing public concern, as well as new interest among the scientific community. Eutrophication: causes, consequences, control provides the latest information on many important aspects of the processes of natural and accelerated eutrophication in major aquatic ecosystems around the world. This book offers a cutting edge resource for researchers and students alike who are studying eutrophication in various ecosystems. It presents the latest trends and developments in the field, including global scenarios and local threats to the dynamics of aquatic ecosystems, economics of eutrophication, eutrophication in the Great Lakes of the Chinese Pacific drainage basin, photoautotrophic productivity in eutrophic ecosystems, eutrophication's impacts on natural metal remediation in salt marshes.
