New Mexican town has splurged and hired Rinaldo the Magnificent for their annual holiday festival and Maddie has been asked to lead the entertainment. In the past the most their town could expect was toddler tap dancers who wandered around the stage while their parents took pictures. Not this year. This year they had a real magician. With an assistant. And doves. Or as real as a birthday party magician gets. But when a rival magician is found dead under the stage and Rinaldo the Magnificent pulls a disappearing act of his own, all eyes are on Maddie. She'd rather not be involved in yet another murder investigation, but if history has taught her anything, it's that she can't leave well enough alone. Not when people aren't who they are presenting themselves to be, and her skills she's honed as a psychologist can bring a murderer to justice. If only the local sheriff would see things her way.

Raising Consumers Lisa Jacobson, 2004. In the present electronic torrent of MTV and teen flicks, Nintendo, and Air Jordan advertisements, consumer culture is an unmistakably important and controversial dimension of modern childhood. Historians and social commentators have typically assumed that the child consumer became significant during the postwar television age. But the child consumer was already an important phenomenon in the early twentieth century. The family, traditionally the primary institution of child socialization, began to face an array of new competitors who sought to put their own imprint on children's acculturation to consumer capitalism. Advertisers, children's magazine publishers, public schools, child experts, and children's peer groups alternately collaborated with and competed against the family in their quest to define children's identities. At stake in these conflicts and collaborations was no less than the direction of American consumer society: would children's consumer training rein in hedonistic excesses or contribute to the spread of hollow commercial values? Not simply a new player in the economy, the child consumer became a lightning rod for broader concerns about the sanctity of the family and the authority of the market in modern capitalist culture. Lisa Jacobson reveals how changing conceptions of masculinity and femininity shaped the ways Americans understood the virtues and vices of boy and girl consumers, and why boys, in particular, emerged as the heroes of the new consumer age. She also analyzes how children's own behavior, peer culture, and emotional investment in goods influenced the dynamics of the new consumer culture. Raising Consumers is a provocative examination of the social, economic, and cultural forces that produced and ultimately legitimized a distinctive children's consumer culture in the early twentieth century.

Highly recommended. Jonathan Maberry, New York Times bestselling author of Rot, Ruin, and Long Past Midnight. Death Masque by Dan Andriacco, 2018-09-04. Small town controversies can be murder. When a newcomer to Erin, Ohio, proposes to tear down the historic Bijou Theater and erect in its place a boutique hotel, Sebastian McCabe adds civic activist to a long resume that already includes magician, mystery writer, professor, and amateur sleuth. With the strategic help of brother-in-law Jeff Cody, Mac launches a far-reaching campaign to save the Bijou. The issue becomes highly political when three eccentric mayoral candidates stake out their positions, which one of them switches after a hefty campaign contribution. The plot machinations of grand opera seem positively guileless by comparison. Mac cries, "Can homicide be far behind?" The opera comparison is a natural one for the new Erin Opera Company, which is staging an original work with a Mardi Gras theme. As murder strikes again, this time back stage, Sebastian McCabe becomes aware that many of the actors in this real-life drama are wearing metaphorical masks as well. Lynda Teal, Jeff's wife, records much of Mac's sleuthing for a podcast series, never imagining that the most dramatic audio of the concluding episode will come from the murderer.
