Resources in Education ,1997-04 Comparative Criminology in Asia Jianhong Liu,Max Travers,Lennon Y.C. Chang,2017-07-15 This edited volume presents the diversity of comparative criminology research in Asia and the complex theoretical and methodological issues involved in conducting comparative research With contributors both from the West and the East exploring these questions the Editors have created a balanced resource as well as set an agenda for future research The increasing pace of globalization means that researchers should be armed with an understanding of how criminal justice systems work across the world In the past comparative research largely compared Western countries to each other or involve d researchers from a Western perspective examining an Asian country with models and theories developed in the West considered to have universal applications This work aims to correct that gap by providing a critical examination of comparative research presenting quantitative and qualitative research data and asking new questions that challenge prevailing research norms and provide an agenda for future research This work will be of interest for researchers across the field of Criminology particularly those with an interest in International and Comparative Research research on or about Asia and related disciplines such as Sociology Demography and Social Policy This fine collection that goes to the rich distinctiveness of Asian criminology The editors have brought together a wonderful collection of authors mainly from the region The distinctiveness of values and relational practices in Asia are recurrent themes that are well developed in this book and help us to make sense of patterns of crime and criminal justice in Asia John Braithwaite Australian National University What theoretical methodological and practical issues must we confront in conducting cross cultural studies encompassing Western and Asian countries Comparative Criminology in Asia discusses these issues and presents exemplary comparative research The introductory chapter and the introduction to each part by the co editors are lucid and highly educational This collection must be required reading for every serious scholar and aspiring graduate student in Asian countries so that criminological and criminal justice studies will be brought to a much higher level o f sophistication Setsuo Miyazawa UC Hastings Can there be and should there be a distinctive Asian criminology What would this involve The answer depends on what one thinks of the universalistic explanatory claims of Western criminology Will these claims become self fulfilling as these societies add to colonial influences a more deliberate borrowing of criminal justice models and established ways of pursuing discipline of criminology Or will a more critical spirit prevail This welcome edited collection by Liu Travers and Chang provides an excellent starting point for reflecting on these and other questions Rather than attempting to provide descriptions of the variety of similarities and differences in this region though there are some fascinating case studies of these the focus is even more on exploring the theoretical approaches and methodologies used in comparing institutional and cultural differences by Asian criminologists and others David Nelken King's College London Criminologists can no longer ignore the impact of globalization on the pattern and amount of crime as we experienced recently nor can we ignore the global change of criminal justice policies to deal with crime There is therefore a desperate need to collect data on how crime and criminal justice are influenced by globalization across Asian countries On the other hand there are debates on the issue of culture specific vs pan culture theories of crime This collection addresses both issues in an interesting way Its publication is timely and welcome Chuen Jim Sheu National Taipei University Alcohol and Alcohol Safety: Teacher's activities guide

Peter Finn,1972 Growing Up Protestant Margaret Lamberts Bendroth,2002 Home and family are key yet relatively unexplored dimensions of religion in the contemporary United States American cultural lore is replete with images of saintly nineteenth century American mothers and their children During the twentieth century however the form and function of the American family have changed radically and religious beliefs have evolved under the challenges of modernity As these transformations took place how did religion manage to fit into modern family life In this book Margaret Lamberts Bendroth examines the lives and beliefs of white middle class mainline Protestants principally northern Presbyterians Baptists Methodists and Congregationalists who are theologically moderate or liberal Mainliners have pursued family issues for most of the twentieth century churning out hundreds of works on Christian childrearing Bendroth's book explores the role of family within a religious tradition that sees itself as America's cultural center In this balanced analysis the author traces the evolution of mainliners roles in middle class American culture and sharpens our awareness of the ways in which the mainline Protestant experience has actually shaped and reflected the American sense of self Hispanic Mental Health Research
