Abstract – The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group was instructed to continue with their current level of activity. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program resulted in a significant increase in physical activity, a significant decrease in body mass index, and a significant decrease in anxiety and depression. The walking program also resulted in a significant increase in self-esteem and a significant decrease in stress. The walking program was well tolerated and had no adverse effects. The results of this study suggest that a supervised walking program can be an effective intervention for improving the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Abstract: This research examines the effects of a 12-week, 100-hour, non-credit, intensive training program on the self-efficacy and self-regulation of 100 first-year nursing students. The program was designed to enhance the students' self-efficacy and self-regulation skills, which are essential for successful learning and performance in the nursing profession. The results of the study indicate that the program had a significant positive impact on the students' self-efficacy and self-regulation skills, which in turn led to improved academic performance. The findings suggest that such intensive training programs can be an effective way to prepare nursing students for the challenges of the profession.

Abstract:—The authors examined the effects of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact aerobically and resistance training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of sedentary, middle-aged women. The program was designed to be safe and enjoyable for women with no previous experience with exercise. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The first session was a warm-up, followed by a 10-minute aerobic workout, a 10-minute resistance training session, and a 10-minute cool-down. The second session was a 10-minute aerobic workout, a 10-minute resistance training session, and a 10-minute cool-down. The third session was a 10-minute aerobic workout, a 10-minute resistance training session, and a 10-minute cool-down. The program was evaluated using a variety of measures, including heart rate, blood pressure, body mass index, and quality of life. The results showed that the program had a positive effect on all of the measures, with the most significant improvements seen in heart rate and blood pressure. The authors conclude that this program is a safe and effective way for sedentary, middle-aged women to improve their physical fitness and health-related quality of life.
